I had the opportunity to review season two of Murdoch Mysteries way back when. It was an interesting first time experience that didn't do much by way of wowing me with its ability to spin a puzzle out of the shows crimes but it did intrigue me with its use of historical inventions popping up now and again as well as famous names and faces in history, perhaps its most intriguing aspect. When I found season four in my work pile I was more than happy to throw the show on and sit back to discover what famous invention would pop up and how it would come about and aid the show in uncovering its mystery. I was sadly disappointed.
